THE BARGAIN CENTER OF CHESTER

EFIRD'S

ALL OUT OF PROPORTION.

If we are ready to accept the axiom that agriculture is the basis of our National life, that everything else is dependent upon it, we are forced to admit that so long as it is statistically shown to be a fact that farm "plants," their utilization and output, have not been keeping pace with the growth of population in this country, something is fearfully and vitally wrong, and that it is time for the business and financial leaders of the Republic, the men who have lifted industry and trade to a highly organized and complex plane, to take hold of this agricultural problem and see what can be done about it.

Per capita produce of land harvested crops has decreased over 16 per cent since 1900, while the average yield per acre of the principal crops combined has been practically stationary during this period. As a result, the production of farm products per acre of our population has declined nearly 9 per cent since 1900, despite the fact that the output per agricultural worker has increased 18 per cent. We have increasingly been meeting our National needs for supplies of food and raw materials by buying more of them from abroad and selling less of our own to foreign countries. Since the beginning of the century, our exports of agricultural products have decreased about 25 per cent, while our imports of food and raw materials have increased nearly 100 per cent.

These figures show several conditions, all of which can be pointed up for the present in order to emphasize how they reveal the weakness of the American farmer and the great and insurmountable disadvantage to which he is being put as compared, for instance, with the position of his agricultural competitors from abroad, or as compared with the increasingly commanding position of business and industry at home.

The combined capital, labor and material costs per unit of product moved almost parallel with the wholesale prices of farm products from 1880 to 1900, but from the latter period up to 1919-1929, the combined unit cost of the principal crops increased nearly 185 per cent, while the wholesale price level of agricultural products increased only 132 per cent.

In consequence of these changes, agriculture has been lagging behind the general march of economic prosperity which has accompanied our industrial development for a generation. As a branch of our economic life, agriculture has had a progressively smaller share in the National income.

In 1880, for each dollar of share in the National income received by persons engaged in all other branches of our economic life, each person engaged in agriculture received 31 cents.

In 1920 this relative share had fallen to 38 cents and in 1929 to 46 cents; but by 1930 it had fallen to 41 cents and in 1931 to 39 cents. Furthermore, the portion of the National wealth which our agriculture represents has grown less rapidly than the remainder, as we have become more and more predominantly an industrial, commercial and financial Nation.

Thus, in real values—that is, in dollars of constant purchasing power—our agricultural wealth increased only 40 per cent from 1900 to 1922, while the total National wealth increased 70 per cent, and the non-agricultural wealth nearly 80 per cent. These changes are broad reflections of the fact that there has been an increasing disparity between the returns to the American farmer from his labor and investment in agriculture, and the returns which have come to workers and investors in other fields.

Thus, in the last crop year, 1929-1930, the Conference Board finds that after paying business expenses and taking a reward for his labor and management at the rates of his hired labor, the average farm owner-operator secured a return on his investment of only 2.44 per cent, or on the other hand he would have secured a return on his capital as he could secure from investing it in a mortgage on another farm, the reward for his year's labor and management would be $4.40.

This includes the value of the land, and the value of the farm, and was less than the average wage of the hired farm laborer, and less than half as much as the average tenant farmer received any investment received for his labor, namely, 9.91. These figures may be contrasted with the average labor salaries of $1,145 for employed workers in such occupations as manufacturing, railroad transportation, clerical work and government service—Chas. Lotie News.

A canal between the Rhine River and the Atlantic, the dream of Southern France for more than four hundred years, has at last been completed.

COOKING.

Professor DeJout, of the Pasteur Institute, in Paris, has evolved a plan for doing away with the housewife's organization of a series of culinary factories. Cooking, he claims, is one of the world's biggest industries and it has never been organized as such.

Millions of women throughout the world, he says, are daily performing a fatiguing task which they do not like. If all cooking were done in a factory there would be a great saving of time and labor.

It is probable a good idea from the economic standpoint. There is much truth in his view and many housewives will approve of it.

But isn't cooking an important and delightful factor in a well-regulated home? Isn't it one of the pleasures that help to hold the family together? Going out to a restaurant all the time or having the meals brought into the house all the time seems hardly a satisfactory substitute for the real pleasure of home cooking.

In this country, to be sure, the average housewife can't cook. She knows how to throw a chunk of meat and a handful of vegetables to a pot and how to make a messy substance which she calls blancet, and so forth. But that is not real cooking.

Real cooking is an art, and like all arts, can be made the source of great pleasure. Few women cook the kind of dinner that papa likes is not enough. It is rarely and frequently, is not healthy. Papa may be laying the foundation of hyperchlorhydria, chronic gastritis, a uric acid diathesis or two or three kindred other troubles that we acquire slowly, after years of faulty feeding.

Mama should learn cooking as a

AFRAID TO EAT

Bleeding Spills, from Indigestion, Put an Oklahoma Man in a Miserable Fix, But He Found Relief.

Swink, Okla.—In describing how he suffered from indigestion, Mr. S. T. Swink, of Okla. says: "I have been a user of Black-Draught for four or five years. I have been taking it for stomach trouble. I suffered after eating with bleeding and a tight feeling. 'It had spells when I could not eat anything. I had severe headaches. I would be nauseated and hurt a lot. I was in a pretty bad fix. 'I began taking Black-Draught. It seemed to help anything that befell me. I had a regular habit of taking it. I can recommend it. 'There were times when I just did without anything to eat until I was too weak to go. I was just miserable, and when I ate my system seemed clogged. 'I had very severe headaches. So I didn't know just what to do. I knew I couldn't work if I didn't eat. I decided the only way was to try something as could be. I took Black-Draught pretty regularly and got where I could eat, and I don't have to take it so regularly now." NC-777 science first, and as an art next. As she gains mastery of the subject she also learns how to square her appetite and individual taste with his capacity for digesting her cooking.

Of course, both papa and mama could study food values and their own bodily limitations and could obtain the proper kind of nourishment from the nearest food factory. But, even then, would they not have lost something? Would not another step have been taken away from the foundation of the home?

To be sure, mama would have more time on her hands. But mama is doing with their spare time these days, it gives you a cold chill.

If, however, this idea of the French professor is carried out and is successful, why not have all babies turned over to a neighborhood crèche or public nursery, have the government or the Standard Oil Company do the family washing and housecleaning, have the National City or First National Bank look after the family budget and, in the same manner, turn over all mama's responsibility to a well-organized, scientific agency?
